7 DIET SECRETS FOR BUSY BODIES

Losing weight is never easy. It takes time, patience and know-how. But if you can change adopt these simple diet secrets, you're on the way to better eating habits and a healthier shape.

1 LISTEN TO YOUR STOMACH

Learn to stop eating when you're comfortably full, but not 'stuffed'. Try to leave the table feeling satisfied but not too-full or 'bloated'.

THINK LONG TERM

- 2 Think in weeks or months, not one week. Your excess weight crept on gradually and that's the best way for it to come off – gradually. That way, you won't trigger your body's 'fast and famine' mode.

DON'T UPSIZE YOUR PORTIONS

- 3 Eat small and regularly. Eating is thermogenic – it generates heat and energy and speeds up your metabolism. Small meals eaten often is a great way to keep your metabolism revving high.

SIT DOWN TO EAT

- 4 Make yourself sit down, even if only for a cup of tea or an apple. This forces you to think twice about stopping to eat (are you really that hungry?) and you may find you cannot be bothered to stop. It also helps you register you're eating. Most overeating is thoughtless eating, snacking while you walk, picking at food while cooking, nibbling in front of television. Concentrate on the food in front of you and enjoy every mouthful.

5 EAT SLOWLY

Don't rush. Eat slowly, savouring each mouthful and chewing your food well. Put your fork and knife down between bites. Aim to be the last person (not the first) to finish. Try and stretch out your meal to 15 minutes to allow your stomach to signal your brain's appetite centre that it's FULL (called the 'eye-mouth gap').

6 AVOID MINDLESS EATING

Don't eat in front of TV. Don't read while you eat. Separate your eating from other things. Psychologists say that the two habits become "linked" in the brain, causing an automatic hunger once you sit down to watch television or start to read the paper. At work, if you can't leave your desk, clear a separate space and enjoy your lunch without doing work.

7 USE THE 90/10 RULE

Don't give up all treats and favourite foods – just keep them small and occasional. If 90 per cent of your intake is healthy, then the remaining 10 per cent of an occasional 'treat' won't derail your efforts. And the odd treat will stop you feeling deprived and less likely to pig out and binge. One chocolate won't 'spoil' a healthy diet – but the whole box will!

START WITH A SALAD

New research has found that eating a salad as an entrée reduces the overall amount you eat at that meal. Salads are filling. They add volume and bulk without adding kilojoules (calories). And you can have dressing with the salad.
